The ballet opens with a toymaker and his apprentice at work in his shop. A peasant and her daughter shyly enter, followed by a haughty English nanny and her charge. The toymaker shows them his dolls and, realizing that they are not interested in buying any of them, he brings on his pride and joy - - the Fairy Doll. Both the English nanny and the peasant want to buy her, but the former outbids the latter.

During the night the Fairy Doll brings all the dolls to human life. They celebrate till dawn when they revert to being dolls. The toymaker enters bright and early and is very much puzzled to find the six parasols belonging to the dolls in another part of his workshop.
